

Elderly patients may experience silent myocardial infarctions (MIs) due to atypical or subtle symptoms, reduced pain sensitivity, comorbidities like diabetes, autonomic dysfunction, decreased cardiac reserve, cognitive impairment, and medications that mask symptoms. These factors can lead to a less noticeable presentation, making the MI harder to detect