A deconstruction tends to be a rather verbose (too many words) document because it is aiming for the contradiction of showing the imprecision of language with precise language.