

Penicillin production research is extensive due to its historical significance as an antibiotic. Cost-effective industrial wastes like sugar cane bagasses and corn steep liquor are preferred substrates for maximizing penicillin yield through various Penicillium chrysogenum fermentation processes