

The anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) is one of the four major ligaments that stabilize the knee joint. The ACL plays a crucial role in maintaining the stability and proper functioning of the knee, enabling smooth and coordinated movements.