

Major cellular functions performed by specialized cells in the body are listed in Table 2–1. Cells that appear similar structurally often have different families of receptors for signaling molecules such as hormones and extracellular matrix (ECM) components, causing them to behave differently. Changes in cells' microenvironments under normal and pathologic conditions can cause the same cell type to have variable features and activities.