

I apologize for the incomplete response in my previous message. Once in the salivary glands, the epimastigotes attach to the cells and transform into metacyclic trypomastigotes, which are the infective form of the parasite that can be transmitted to a new host when the tsetse fly takes another blood meal