

Several lines of evidence suggest that choline is indeed an essential nutrient for humans: 1. Human cells grown in culture have an absolute requirement for choline. Humans fed by vein with solutions containing little or no choline develop liver dysfunction that is similar to that seen in choline deficient animals. Malnourished humans have diminished plasma or serum choline concentrations. 2.3.4.5