

The Tulsa Time Capsule A crowd of people gathered outside the courthouse in Tulsa, Oklahoma, in June 1957, to witness the burial of an unusual time capsule a brand-new gold-and-white Plymouth Belvedere car. The contents of a "typical woman's handbag in the glove compartment looked like a lump of rotted leather. The memo that recorded the names of the contestants wasn't found. There was a bit of disappointment that the items were not in better condition. However, some items inside the time capsule were in good shape—they included a U.S. flag and some historical documents, such as aerial maps of the city and postcards. 5. The good news is that when the Belvedere was unearthed, Teddy and Gene were still alive. They never thought they would be here to see it happen. Someone present said, "It's our King Tut's tomb." Sure you will answered his brother Henry, who was 19. It lay there for 50 years. On June 13, 2007, the vault was opened, and car was raised as thousands of people watched. The organizer of the event said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I present you Miss Belvedere" Unfortunately the tomb was unable to protect the car from moisture, and the vintage vehicle was covered in rust.