

Through the popularity of early translations into Arabic of works of European fiction (Jules Verne and Alexandre Dumas, pere being especially popular) and imitations of them by Arab writers, the novel rapidly established a place for itself within the currents of intellectual change during the 19th century