

Over the past decade, chronic heart failure (CHF) has become more prevalent world wide 1. This is mainly due to ageing of the population and the longer survival of people who have suffered myocardial infarction and heart failure