

Base Quantities. Thus, what we do is pick out--by international agreement-- a small number of physical quantities, such as length and time, and assign standards to them alone. Fortunately, they are not all independent; for example, speed is the ratio of a length to a time