

Iron is found on earth mainly as insoluble ferric oxide. This ferrous bicarbonate is oxidized into ferric hydroxide, which is a precipitate. Under anaerobic conditions, ferric ion is reduced to soluble ferrous ion. When it comes in contact with water, it dissolves to form ferrous bicarbonate under favorable conditions.