

For many children with intellectual disabilities (ID), their medical, physical, and behavioural problems are of principal priority for caregivers. New insights from brain research provide guidelines for such early interventions.