

At the beginning of the story, Mrs. Mallard is overcome with grief with the loss of her husband. This quote shows the feminist theory that it was assumed women were oppressed and shows the patriarchal ideology. This quote shows the feminist theory that it was assumed women were oppressed and shows the patriarchal ideology. After she enters her room she goes to the chair and the story says, "Into this she sank, pressed down by a physical exhaustion that haunted her body and seemed to reach into her soul."

This shows us that her strong emotions caused her physical exhaustion. Not only was she emotional, but now the story shows that Mrs. Mallard can't even handle it physically either. It goes even further to say that the weakness even goes into her soul. After she sits down, Mrs. Mallard begins to appear as a stronger woman which is where the feminist theory takes effect. She looks out of the house through the large open window which could also signify the open opportunities available to her now. She begins to see how her marriage made her into a lesser person. She realizes that she has been living her life through limitations caused from being married. Mrs. Mallard knows that she can begin to live for herself. The story says, "There would be no powerful will bending hers in that blind persistence with which men and women believe they have a right to impose a private will upon a fellow-creature." After she enters her room she goes to the chair and the story says, "Into this she sank, pressed down by a physical exhaustion that haunted her body and seemed to reach into her soul." This shows us that her strong emotions caused her physical exhaustion. Not only was she emotional, but now the story shows that Mrs. Mallard can't even handle it physically either. It goes even further to say that the weakness even goes into her soul. After she sits down, Mrs. Mallard begins to appear as a stronger woman which is where the feminist theory takes effect. She looks out of the house through the large open window which could also signify the open opportunities available to her now. She begins to see how her marriage made her into a lesser person. She realizes that she has been living her life through limitations caused from being married. Mrs. Mallard knows that she can begin to live for herself. The story says, "There would be no powerful will bending hers in that blind persistence with which men and women believe they have a right to impose a private will upon a fellow-creature." It also seems like Mrs. Mallard thought that she wasn't even allowed to have her own thoughts which was probably true. At the beginning of the story, Mrs. Mallard is overcome with grief with the loss of her husband. Mrs. Mallard has heart problems which can make the reader see her as a weaker person right at the beginning of the story. From the start, we as readers are told to see Mrs. Mallard as a naturally weaker character. Mrs. Mallard has heart problems which can make the reader see her as a weaker person right at the beginning of the story. From the start, we as readers are told to see Mrs. Mallard as a naturally weaker character. It also seems like Mrs. Mallard thought that she wasn't even allowed to have her own thoughts which was probably true. Now that she could live for herself, she wanted nothing more than to have a long time to enjoy it. When she was forced into the role of timid and obedient wife, she didn't see a point in living. After she says this, her husband walks into their home and she realizes that he wasn't really dead all along. She finally allowed herself to think of her life as living for herself. Another way to make Mrs. Mallard appear as a weaker person was when she went to her room alone to continue her grief. Mrs. Mallard goes on to realize how much she really didn't love her husband.