

Information systems are a set of interconnected elements working together to collect, process, store, and distribute information to coordinate the activities and support decision-making processes in an organization.