

The missing mass, in this case, is likely converted into gases and released into the atmosphere during the burning process