

The scarcity of drinking water necessitates the desalination of seawater for fresh water production, requiring excessive energy consumption, which can be reduced through technology