The text is about the author's experience with different religions and philosophies that he studied and practiced over many years of his life. He tells us how he became a believer in various religions at different stages of his life, and how he also tried different sects that claimed to have the ultimate truth. He says that he felt mysterious things that affected his theory of signs, which he considered more valuable than being always in a state of search. He also visited different groups and sects, and compared their beliefs and practices.
