

The poet requests a strong wind. He extends an invitation to move into the wilderness and give up their fake pals. He claims that unappreciative friends are far crueler than the bitter and powerful wind. The wind lacks the sharpness of human teeth. Joyful and uncomplicated