A software producer, or developer, creates or develops a set of programs to meet the specifications of a user, if there is a contract, or of a specific problem if it is general software. The discussion touches on stan– dards, reliability, security, safety, quality of software, quality of service of software products, causes of software failures, developer and buyer protection, and techniques for improving software quality. The buyer may be an individual or a company.