

Typically, Lanistes carinatus's digestive glands are composed of tubules, each of which has a central lumen surrounded by a single layer of columnar epithelial cells that have undergone differentiation into digestive and secretory cells in addition to calcium cells.