

Over the years, various push and pull factors have prompted people to leave their homelands and come to America. America's reputation as a land of opportunity and its diverse cultural landscape have historically drawn immigrants seeking a fresh start and the chance to fulfill their dreams. Push factors include political instability, persecution, and war, which compel individuals to seek safety and stability elsewhere.