

In conclusion, tariffs and quotas play a significant role in shaping the economic landscape of the GCC region. While they can support domestic industries and contribute to economic growth, they also have implications for trade dynamics and consumer welfare.