

Whales Whales are warm-blooded creatures that nurse their young. They can be found in temperate oceans and tropical waters. Whales eat a variety of species from the entire food chain from tiny zooplankton to other large mammals. Whales evolved from land living mammals, and must regularly surface to breathe air. Whales are the largest animals ever known to have lived on Earth