

Transpirational water flow in the xylem requires a mechanically strong wall that resists collapse in response to the negative pressure in the xylem