

The de Broglie equation predicts that all moving particles have wave characteristics. By comparison, an electron moving at the same speed has the easily measured wavelength of $2.9 \times 10^{-5} \text{ m}$. Subsequent experiments have proven that electrons and other moving particles do indeed have wave characteristics. Note that the equation includes Planck's constant