

Thus, while R. Jakobson, a linguist, speaks of six functions of language (referential, expressive, poetic, conative, phatic or metalinguistic) others talk about the expressive function (expressing feelings) and conative function (function linked to the receiver). Language form and language function In linguistics, a form–function relationship links the form of a linguistic element to its function in meaning