

or Normalized Difference Vegetation Index, is a widely used vegetation index in remote sensing. NDVI is extensively used in agriculture, ecology, forestry, and environmental monitoring to assess vegetation conditions, monitor changes over time, and make informed decisions regarding land management and crop productivity