

Road transportation within air logistics is crucial for transporting goods between shippers, airports, and customers. This component is often the most expensive and time-consuming aspect of air logistics, as it involves multiple stages, from picking up goods from the shipper to delivering them to the airport and, in some cases, directly to the customer.