

Some people, when they come into contact with airborne, animals and plants, will experience allergic-" reactions. -Why do these reactions happen? When a person is exposed to allergens produced by animals or plants, their body produces antihistamine or histamine compounds through the activation of antigen-antibody reactions. This results in allergic symptoms such as fever, asthma, and dermatitis. - nowadays specific tests are used to trigger allergic reactions for diagnostic purposes