

The in-person interview format is clearly the most intense and stressful for both the respondent and the interviewer. Such situations can cause increased stress and fatigue, which may have unfavorable effects on the quality of the responses.