

In the eighteenth century, Jean-Jacques Rousseau called for learning by direct observation of material things and natural phenomena instead of using words only