

The Los Angeles Lakers have listed LeBron James (left ankle peroneal tendinopathy) as questionable, Anthony Davis (bilateral Achilles teninopathy) as probable and Cam Reddish (right ankle sprain) as out for Saturday night's game against the Golden State Warriors. Gabe Vincent, Christian Wood, Colin Castleton and Jarred Vanderbilt all remain out with their respective injuries with no set timetable for a return although head coach Darvin Ham said at practice on Friday that there should be an update on all of them soon. Speaking of the Warriors, they are expected to get Stephen Curry back in the lineup after dealing with an ankle issue of his own, meaning all of the stars should be in action Saturday night in primetime in L.A. Darvin Ham discusses importance of Lakers' game against Warriors At this stage of the season everyone knows how important every game is for the Lakers, but head coach Darvin Ham spoke on just how crucial this one against the Warriors is. "Extremely important," Ham said after practice on Friday. Reddish being out for another game is unfortunate for the Lakers as he continues to deal with an ankle injury that has had him in and out of the lineup for a while.
