

Shakespeare compares his beloved to a summer's day, but says she's more beautiful and sweet-tempered, unlike summer days that can be windy, short-lived, and rough on delicate flowers