

There are minute details in our lives that attract us to contemplate them. We describe them with the word "beautiful." In my opinion, this is the meaning of beauty. We see beauty a lot in Allah's creation, such as nature and creatures, and sometimes we see it hiding among drawings, articles, and poems. It is important to look for beauty everywhere because that makes us feel the greatness of the Creator, how he was able to create the simplest things with such precision, not to mention that beauty makes the heart feel warm and happy. In the past, Arabs saw beauty in the length, blackness, and density of hair. Among the standards of beauty among Arabs in the past were also the dimples that appear prominently when smiling. As I always say, beauty is the beauty of the soul, as it often reflects the true nature of the person, just as a mirror reflects the appearance of those who look at it
