

In this scene, the wife's cries for connection--"I want a cat"--are met with silence. Hemingway shows how loneliness festers when desires go unheard. She looks in the mirror, asking George if she should change her hair. He replies coldly, "I like it the way it is."can be a shelter in someone's storm.Thank you for your time