

Targeted genetic engineering of human pluripotent cells is a prerequisite for exploiting their full potential. Our data suggest that TALENs employing the specific architectures described here mediate site-specific genome modification in human pluripotent cells with similar efficiency and precision as do zinc-finger nucleases (ZFNs).