

Instead, children acquire language actively by listening to what is said to them, then constructing their own ways of using the language, trying out different structures to see if they work or not