

In high-income countries, the biggest cause of premature death, defined as death before 70 years, is smoking of manufactured cigarettes. Cessation, particularly before age 40 years, yields large reductions in mortality risk.