

Kyrgyzstan fell under foreign control several times and did not gain nation–state sovereignty until after the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991. Since declaring its independence, the state has become a sovereign, centralized, parliamentary republic. United