

Protein purification has been performed for more than 200 years. In the early days of protein chemistry, the only practical way to separate different types of proteins was precipitation techniques. Initially in the development phase, the protein separation strategies involved the principles which were used for the isolation and purification of organic compounds, like crystallization, extraction and precipitation.