

Moreover, the range of social and psychological consequences of anemia, including poor school attendance, social withdrawal, diminished interest in work, inability to concentrate, and feelings of depression, should not be overlooked, although they pose methodological challenges when it comes to quantifying them. Functional consequences of anemia include a reduction in physical work capacity, immune dysfunction, and altered cognitive function