

I had an unforgettable experience last summer. Feeling a bit hopeless, I had to explain for the lady what I need in my own language and I said "SHOES, OUCH!" with huge gestures and loud tone. It was an embarrassing moment. That is when she nodded her head and smiled to me. Then, she moved from the counter and got me a cream and a bandage and motioned "TWICE" to me. Which means I have to apply it two times a day. The only problem we had was that we didn't speak any Turkish. Unfortunately, I was wearing a new shoe and the back of my heel was covered with blisters. So, I went to one of the pharmacies to buy bandages. I looked around for some bandages but I couldn't find any. I was glad and relieved she understood me. I learnt a the basics of the language to any country I go to. valuable lesson that day, that I should learn. My friend Reem and I were in Turkey. We were very pleased and happy learning all about its rich culture and traditions. One day, we were shopping in Mall of Istanbul. We bought .lots of interesting goods and clothes
