

results suggest that hyperproteic hypocaloric enteral nutrition is associated with reduced risk of multiple organ failure. There is still controversy regarding the accurate nutritional therapy for critically ill patients, specially the amount of calories and the types of nutrients required