

Behaviorism Believes that a learner starts out with a clean slate, and behavior is shaped by positive and negative reinforcement. Behaviorism assumes that a learner is essentially passive, responding to environmental stimuli. Reinforcement, positive or negative, increases the possibility of an event happening again.