

Vena contrata formation –When fluid passes through the orifice, the gradual contraction of fluid takes place. The fluid stream begins to converge and pass through the orifice. The jet of fluid continues to converging in a smooth path even after it passes the orifice. Fluid converges to the minimum cross-section downstream of flow then it diverges again. This minimum cross-section is known as vena contrata