

By enhancing patient education and addressing psychological distress, medication adherence can??? be improved, leading to better pain control. One major factor contributing to nonadherence is depression, which not only affects a patient's willingness to follow prescribed treatments but also influences their .perception of pain