

According to this perspective, people make sense of what other people say not by 'figuring it out' logically, but by paying attention to the local conditions of the conversation itself, especially the sequence of utterances