

In conclusion, while there are valid concerns about the disciplinary approaches of my generation, the shift towards understanding, positive reinforcement, and teaching accountability represents a more humane and potentially more effective method of guiding children's behavior compared to the punitive measures of previous generations.