

Caitlin Clark faces potential WNBA suspension threatening Fever's season. Caitlin Clark, the Indiana Fever's standout rookie, is on the brink of a potential suspension by the WNBA due to a series of technical fouls accrued early in the season. Clark's confrontations with referees add to mounting frustrations. Clark's previous technical fouls have also stemmed from disputes with referees. With three technical fouls already on her record, Clark must navigate the remaining 31 games of the regular season with no more than three additional technicals to avoid suspension. The Indiana Fever have struggled this season, holding a 1-8 record, and Clark's mounting frustrations have been evident. Under WNBA regulations, a player is suspended for one game upon receiving their seventh technical foul of the season, with additional suspensions for every subsequent technical. Following the altercation, Fever head coach Christie Sides also received a technical foul after Clark appeared to be fouled near the basket without a call from the officials. Opposing teams have targeted her with physical play, exacerbating her difficulties on the court. Thursday's incident occurred when Clark confronted Vivians, resulting in double technical fouls for both players.